

For Public Sector Auditors: The Internal Auditor as Proactive Manager of Risks

Submitted on 09 Apr 2013 by

European Seminar, May 13 – 14, 2013, Berlin

Internal Auditors in modern public administrations want to be regarded as active consultants and accompanying partners of the management of the public authority. They have to forecast possible pitfalls, suggest corrective actions and accompany follow-up process. Furthermore, they have to improve the established auditing processes and environment in order to reach an even greater value to their public institution.

Learn how to effectively increase the impact of the auditors' work at the special seminar for auditors in the public sector: May 13 – 14, 2013 in Berlin. Practical workshops on Continuous Auditing of Projects and Documenting the Auditing Process are included in the programme.

Leading audit experts from:

- Ministry of Finance, France
- HM Treasury, United Kingdom
- European Structural Funds Managing Authority, Portugal
- City University London, United Kingdom

will train the participants in a practical way how to increase the value and the impact of their work. Special focus will be put on new IT Tools, psychology of audit, marketing of audit results.

- Which processes and tools can help internal auditors to maximise the added value for the public administration
- How can internal auditors work together with their institution's management even more effectively
- How can internal auditors choose proper measures
- Why are risk-oriented approach and risk culture so important
