Description

OpenRaadsinformatie is an online application that provides users with access to public meeting, items on the agenda, motions and documents on various Dutch municipalities and administrations of provinces. Created by the coalition of Dutch municipalities and the Open State Foundation, OpenRaadsinformatie acts as a central point of access to government data and documents, and is utilised by several other applications.

Benefits

The application is useful for:

-  Civil servants curious about how other public bodies tackle problems;
-  Engaged citizens that want to keep track of what is discussed;
-  Developers who use the data to build new applications; and
-  Journalists interested in tracking policy-making over time.

How open data is used

Guided by an open government principle, OpenRaadsinformatie actively publishes government data as open data. Both the source-code of the search engine and the server is available as open-source on GitHub.
