GetTheData

Description

Get The Data organises UK open data into location-based dashboards, surfacing the data available, and signposting the source. They include a GetTheData panel alongside all the data they publish, explaining where to get the data, and where to view the license. Governmental open data is used (postcodes) to make a categorization of the data based on location.

Benefits

Get The Data makes it easier to find open data in a transparent manner based on geographical location in the UK.

How open data is used

Get The Data collects open data from the national open data portals in the United Kingdom. The open data is categorized per region. The company conducts research with this data. They share relevant data insights with their clients. They use open postcodes to categorise the data and use an Open Government License. Both can be downloaded on the website.
